TAKING A SNOW DAY?

Metro offers some legitimate and not-so-legitimate reasons for not showing up to work. 4

LARGEST WARSHIP TO SOUTH CHINA SEA

1 Japan plans to dispatch its largest warship on a three-month tour through the South China Sea beginning in May, three sources said, in its biggest show of naval force in the region since World War II. China claims almost all the disputed waters and its growing military presence has fueled concern in Japan and the West, with the United States holding regular air and naval patrols to ensure freedom of navigation. The Izumo helicopter carrier, commissioned only two years ago, will make stops in Singapore, Indonesia, the Philippines and Sri Lanka before joining the Malabar joint naval exercise with Indian and U.S. naval vessels in the Indian Ocean in July. REUTERS

VIDEO POSES QUESTIONS IN FERGUSON SHOOTING

2 A previously undisclosed video of Michael Brown, recorded hours before the unarmed black 18-year-old was fatally shot by a police officer in Ferguson, Missouri, has raised new questions about a suspected robbery that police said he committed in his final hours. The footage shows Brown at a convenience store the night before he was killed. It was unearthed by a documentary filmmaker. Shortly after Brown's death, local police had released security-camera video of Brown visiting the same store in the daytime, a few minutes before he was shot. That footage, which now appears to depict the second of two visits to the Ferguson Market and Liquor store by Brown within a span of a few hours, showed Brown pushing a worker before walking out with cigarillos in an apparent robbery. REUTERS

SOME STATES SUE TO BLOCK TRAVEL BAN

3 A group of states renewed their effort to block President Trump's revised temporary ban on refugees and travelers from several Muslim-majority countries, arguing that his executive order is the same as the first one that was halted by federal courts. Court papers filed by the state of Washington and joined by California, Maryland, Massachusetts, New York and Oregon asked a judge to stop the March 6 order from taking effect on Thursday. An amended complaint said the order was similar to the original Jan. 27 directive because it "will cause severe and immediate harms to the States, including our residents, our colleges and universities, our health care providers, and our businesses." REUTERS

TRUMP PLANS TO HOST CHINA'S XI IN APRIL

4 President Donald Trump is planning to host Chinese President Xi Jinping at a two-day summit next month, according to media reports, as his administration seeks to smooth relations with the world's second-largest economy. The meeting is tentatively scheduled for April 6-7 at Trump's Mar-a-Lago resort in Florida, U.S. online media outlet Axios reported on Monday, citing officials familiar with the plans.

10 Reasons for missing work during the snowstorm

Metro has put together a list of five legitimate reasons for taking the day off and five less-than-legitimate reasons.

GARY KANE
@MetroNewYork
gary.kane@metro.us

As a blanket of late-winter snow covers the Northeast, employers are expecting to hear from some workers who say they will not be showing up today.

The reasons for their absence vary depending on the snow accumulation in a particular region and the ability of municipalities to clear roads and sidewalks and keep mass transit running.

However, if you cannot decide whether to take a snow day, Metro has compiled a list of five legitimate and five not-so-legitimate reasons for telling your boss that the company must forge ahead without your presence today.

Legitimate Reasons:

1 Dangerous road conditions

The governor or mayor advises citizens to stay off the roads. You intend to heed the warning.

2 Trains aren't running

Riding the rails can turn into an all-day adventure. Snowdrifts and the possibility of downed trees and power lines falling on the tracks can bring trains to a halt for extended periods.

Transit officials have advised that there could be delays on below-ground lines as well.

3 Schools are closed

Child care can be a serious issue when schools close, and public schools are closed today in New York City, Philadelphia and Boston. You have a 4-year-old boy and a 6-year-old girl.

4 Power outage

You may need to find an alternative shelter for the night if the electric power fails. Kerosene heaters are an option, but must not be unattended.

5 Coastal flooding

You and your family need to safeguard the basement against a possible storm surge.

Less-than-legitimate reasons:

1 Lack of equipment

If your snowshoes and cross-country skis are still in a storage unit across town, you cannot be expected to brave the hazards of snow-covered sidewalks.

2 Carpool driver stuck in driveway

It isn't your turn to drive. The designated driver threw out his back attempting to shovel a path to the street.

3 Chionophobia

You suffer from a fear of snow, called chionophobia. This phobia

At what point do you forget about trying to get to work? GETTY IMAGES is related to a fear of bodily harm or death. You are particularly terrified of becoming stranded in snow. You might add that you also suffer from nivisphobia, the irrational fear of avalanches.

4 Weather channel addiction

You confess that you're obsessed with interactive weather maps. You need to track the storm. And you cannot turn your back on such lists as "10 Winter Driving Mistakes You Don't Know You're Making."

5 Working from home

In the digital age, more and more people are capable of working from home. You tell your boss that you have excellent internet access at home. She reminds you that you work as a sous chef.

Winter Storm Stella's 'ingredients' linked to global warming, says climate change expert

Snow in March is not an anomaly, but this nor'easter reflects risks of greenhouse gas emissions.

AMANDA MIKELBERG
@MetroNewYork
amanda.mikelberg@metro.us

In like a lion, out like a potential case study for global warming.

Plows and loaders are now excavating the first half of snowfall of Winter Storm Stella, a storm that could rival March's biggest storms on record, such as the 1888 "Blizzard of the Century" which buried New York City in 16 inches and paralyzed much of the country.

As much as 24 inches could fall in places across the Northeast, making Stella a curiosity for climate scientists to test theories about changing arctic sea ice levels colliding with warm air, an expert told Metro.

The Stella system, billed as a classic nor'easter because of its atmospheric ingredients and path, is the result of the merging of two low pressure (warmer) systems sweeping in from the Pacific Northwest jet stream and from the Gulf Coast, joining with the cold air coming down from the arctic.

The resulting system will be traveling up the East Coast on Tuesday, dumping 8 to 20 inches of snow, or more, with winds topping 40 and 50 mph, earning the storm blizzard status.

The potentially historical snowfall follows February's record-high temperatures (Boston hit 72 and Philadelphia hit 74 degrees on Feb. 24). Frigid temperatures across the Northeast forced shorts back into hibernation.

"Extreme weather is the new normal," New York Gov. Andrew Cuomo said Monday while making emergency announcements ahead of the storm.

While March snow is not unheard of, aspects of this storm are suggestive of erratic weather patterns that have arisen in recent years, said NASA climate scientist and Columbia University researcher Justin Mankin.

"One of our expectations of global warming is an average decrease in snow, but also an increase in snowfall extremes," he said.

"There is a robust expectation of increased extreme weather events. Increasingly the climate science community has been able to attribute the risk of occurrence of those weather extremes to global warming."

Directly correlating this storm with global warming requires rigorous research, which has not been done, Mankin said. We can get crazy weather just by virtue of the earth's complexity in absence of greenhouse gas factors.

But what scientists can do with confidence now is associate risk of occurrences for weather extremes with global warming, much like medical research can associate lifestyle with heart risk factors.

There are some "ingredients that suggest superficially that the warming that has occurred from people and fossil fuels could potentially have played a role," he said.

Those ingredients include a theory associating 2017's record low arctic sea ice — meaning more melt than ever seen before — for the arctic air traveling farther south than usual because of ice dispersion.

Another theoretical ingredient would be the statistically proven increase in water surface temperatures in the Texas gulf and hotter air coming from the Pacific Northwest, he said.

Since Jan. 1, there have been 9,000 record-high temperatures set in the US, compared to only 1,300 record lows, CNN reported.

Boston police body camera program extended to collect more data

The pilot program will continue for another six months, which will provide a full year of information.

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT
kristindakota@metro.us

The Boston Police Department will continue its body camera pilot program another six months to collect more data, Mayor Marty Walsh announced.

Walsh and Boston Police Commissioner William Evans were able to reach an agreement with the union, Boston Police Patrolmen's Association, to extend the program six months. The mayor's office announced the extension in a statement on Monday.

The program got off to a shaky start when not enough officers signed up for the volunteer effort.

The department then picked most of the 100 officers to take part, which the BPPA said violated the terms of their agreement. A judge in September ruled in favor of the city, allowing the program to begin.

The pilot was initially set at six months and now

will continue for another six months, in order to make sure there is enough data available for an "effective study" of the body camera program, according to the mayor's office.

"This extension is a positive development and I look forward to continuing to build on the success of this pilot program," Walsh said in a statement. "We are fortunate to have one of the best police forces in the country, and our officers work hand in hand with the community to make all neighborhoods safer."

As with the original agreement, 100 patrol officers will wear body cameras while conducting on-duty police activity. The patrol officers currently wearing body cameras will continue to participate in the extended program, though the mayor's office noted that other officers will be trained and assigned if necessary.

The program will now end Sept. 11, 2017. A full year of data will provide observations in "all seasons and various situations," according to the mayor's office.

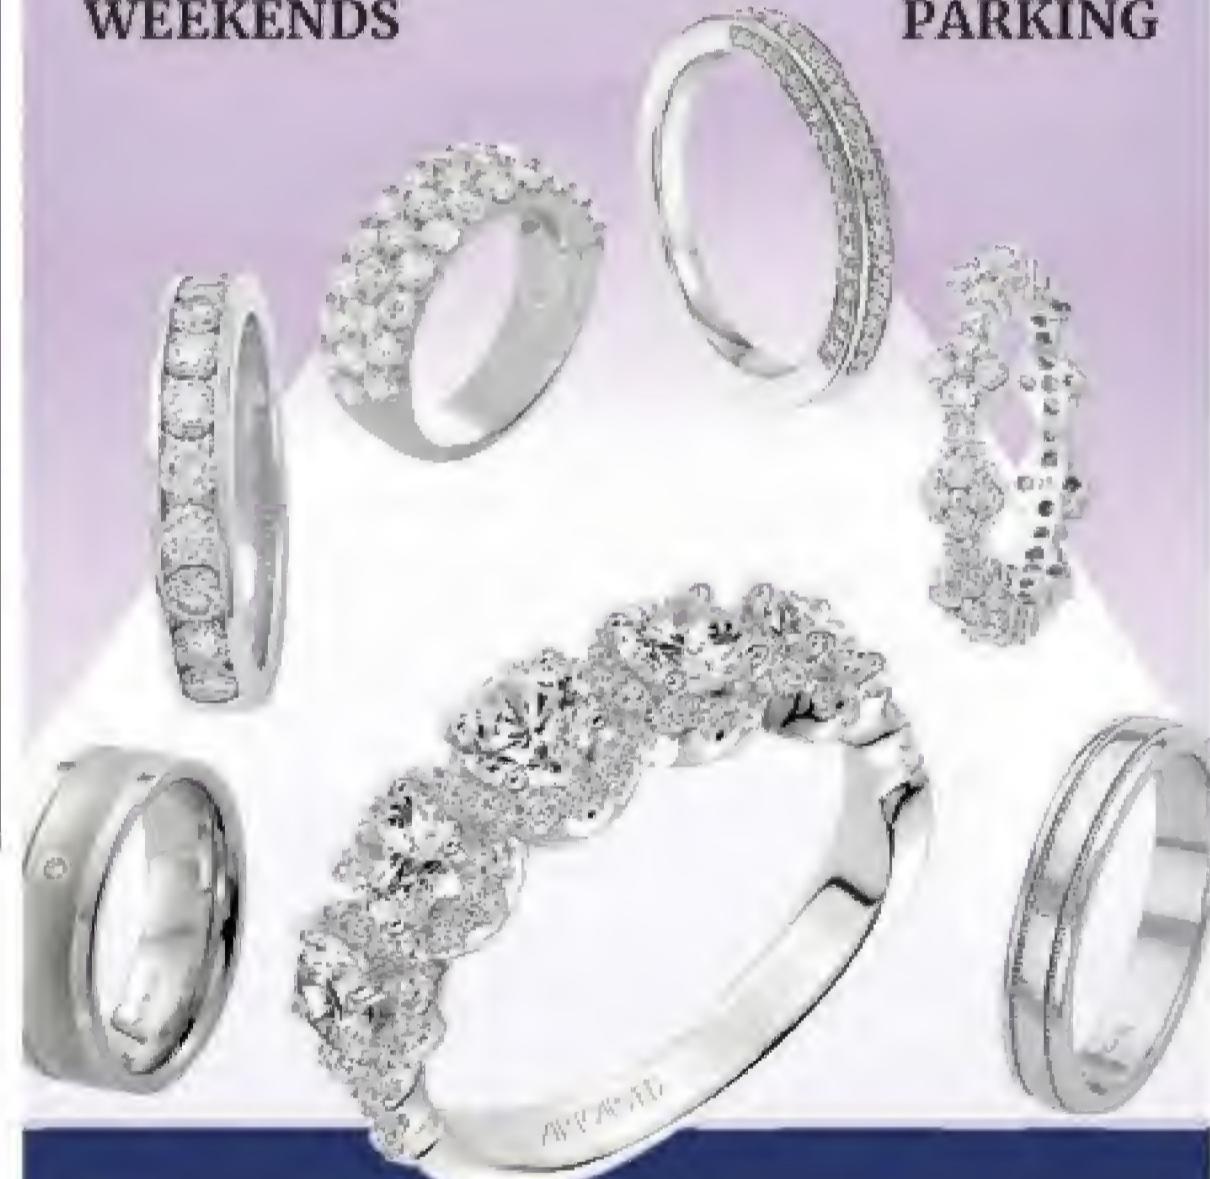

"I am pleased that the pilot program will be continuing through what tends to be our busiest months of the year," Evans said in a statement.

Brangelina got magic tattoos right before divorce

Picture this: it's February 2016. You're married to the love of your life. The love of your life, incidentally, is Brad Pitt. He's mostly aged gracefully — you have no complaints. One day, you have an idea. "Hey, Brad?" you say. "What if we got superpainful magic tattoos that will bind us together forever?" Brad acquiesces, because he's usually down for whatever. You smile to yourself. You're the luckiest goth in the world.

OK, great. Now you're in Angelina Jolie's head space. Problem is, months later, you file for divorce.

Because turns out, even magic tattoos can't save your marriage.

That's right: Angelina and Brad were tattooed by a celebrated artist who formerly moonlighted as a monk, as you do. The tattoos, according to The Daily Beast, are traditionally believed to give the wearers magic powers, and were intended to symbolically bind the two A-listers together as husband and wife which, obviously, did not work.

This continues to be them most painful celebrity divorce of our time. For me, at least. I can't speak for Brad or Angelina.

Is Lindsay Lohan starting a Muslim fashion line?

Lindsay Lohan took to her Instagram over the weekend to reveal she's working on a new fashion line. And, oh boy, gird your loins.

The 30-year-old posed coyly with a headscarf covering her head and draped over her mouth with the caption, "New Fashion Line coming soon..." Between this and her claims that she was "racially profiled" for wearing a headscarf at Heathrow Airport — yeah, she really said that — I think we can all assume LiLo is probably starting her own line of bedazzled head scarfs for women with questionable political ties. You know, like her.

The actress, who had a guest role on "Ugly Betty" one time, has been studying Islam and carrying around a copy of the Quran to prove it for a while. Her favorite hobbies are hanging out with her best friend, the president of Turkey, and comparing herself favorably to cartoon princesses on Instagram.

Ed Sheeran will be on Game of Thrones

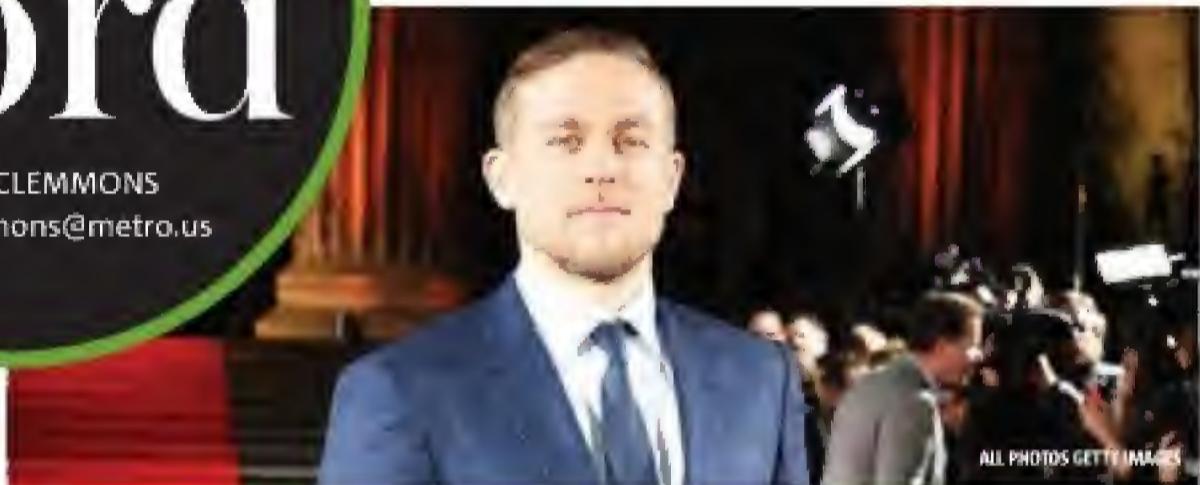

Ed Sheeran has been cast in a small role on the upcoming season of "Game of Thrones," and if you're anything like me, you're scratching your head right now and asking: "OK, but why?" According to Rolling Stone, the singer was invited to the set as a surprise for Maisie Williams, aka Arya Stark. And since he was already there, the 26-year-old ended up filming a small, unspecified role. "Game of Thrones" actually has a history of recruiting musicians for small, unrecognizable appearances on the show, including members of Coldplay and Of Monsters and Men. The HBO show is also known for killing off any person who is extremely attractive (My heart yearns for you, Robb!).

Thanks for giving us something we didn't want, "Game of Thrones"! At least Arya got to have a small moment of happiness.

a pretty boy," he continues. What stunning self-reflection!

Hunnam also talks about a variety of other things, like how his commitment to method acting is kind of ruining his relationship with his girlfriend, and also about how shakshuka is the new frittata. What a legit dude, am I right?

Charlie Hunnam talks about being pretty

Charlie Hunnam, star of "Sons of Anarchy" and now "Lost City of Z," is a good looking dude. And because he knows what we want to hear, he's finally opening up about being the prettiest boy at the ball.

In an interview with InStyle, Roxane Gay — my fave — asks the 37-year-old about how damn fine he is. In response, Hunnam exhibits, what some may call, a shocking show of self-awareness. "It's both collateral damage and a huge opportunity. I mean, it's a visual medium, and it makes it a lot easier to get roles if you're a little easier on the eyes." Refreshing!

"There will probably be those that still relegate me to being

Plus-size brands that slay

Meet the indies.

SHEILA DOUGHERTY
letters@metro.us

Not long ago, if you were an above-average-size American woman — for years, that was a 14, but as of 2016, it's a 16 — your sartorial choices were limited. Very limited. For safe, everyday wear, there was that one store in the mall (sounds like Lame Giant). God forbid you had a formal event to dress for, because then you were banished to a poorly lit corner of a department store crammed with a few racks of dowdy mother-of-the-bride frocks with garish prints.

But thanks to fiercely fashionably social-media influencers such as Gabi Gregg (gabifresh.com) and Nicolette Mason (nicolettemason.com), consumers are demanding better, and smart designers and retailers are responding. Even Lane Bryant, once the sole refuge of the style-parched plus-size, has stepped up its game. It just launched a collection with red-carpet favorite designer Prabal Gurung, and in recent years has commissioned exclusive lines from Christian Siriano, Isabel Toledo and Sophie Theallet. E-commerce has made it easier for fresh plus-size brands to emerge. Here are five indie brands that absolutely do not flatter — they slay.

Universal Standard

This label is making its mark with a chic, minimalist classics in sizes

10-28. Cashmere-blend sweaters, seasonless tees, tanks, dresses and blouses in neutral hues mix and match easily with its jeans and jersey pencil skirts. Layer pieces like the net dress and leatherette skirt to add some edge. Bonus: If you are in New York City, or plan to be, you can make an appointment with a stylist at Universal Standard's showroom in the Garment District.

Eloquii

In 2011, The Limited launched Eloquii for plus-size women, only to shutter it 18 months, devastating the line's loyal following. But former Limited employees revived Eloquii as an indie that skews young and ultra-on-trend, flipping off the notion that body-con dresses and vibrant colors don't belong on bigger bodies. And in what might be Eloquii's greatest PR coup, when Aidy Bryant of "SNL" attended the Emmys in a dress the brand designed for her, more than 1,500 people joined the waiting list to buy it. eloquii.com

Anna Scholz

London-based Anna Scholz, a former plus-size model from Germany, sold her first collection to Lane Bryant in 1996. Since then, her clothes have sold in the likes of Saks Fifth Avenue and Bloomingdales. Now, her well-constructed silk and jersey wrap dresses, tunics and separates in unexpected luxe prints are available on her website. annascholz.com

Carmakoma

Don't let the mostly black palette fool you — Carmakoma is not about hiding your shape. With curve-skimming leatherette skirts and grommetstudded jersey dresses, plus a touch of lace here and there, these are clothes for rocker girls who pay the bills with an office job. The Danish brand's spring collection is called "Diversity Is Beautiful," which may or may not have been planned before 2017 — either way, it's apt. Shipping to the U.S. is free on orders of $130 and up. carmakoma.com

Beth Ditto

When Topshop asked Gossip frontwoman Beth Ditto to play its London flagship store in 2007, she promptly told the company, which (still) does not stock a plus-size range, to shove it. "I don't think it's fair to put my face somewhere where they would never let me in there to wear their clothes," she told BBC Radio. Topshop's plus-size sister, Evans, subsequently retained Ditto to design a line to ensure you don't fade into the background. That set the stage for her indie label, which is now in its second season. bethditto.com

It's been less than two months and Donald Trump has already ignited a roaring backlash across the country.

Between the protests, government investigations and, lately, the rebranding of the word "facts," it's completely understandable if you're confused.

These four courses aim to tackle some of the overarching questions surrounding this presidency.

1 Top 10 Social Issues for the President's First 100 Days

The beginning of a presidential administration — a time when Congress will begin to pass new laws and implement social policies that will impact all of us — is a crucial moment to begin engaging in the national conversation. In this self-paced course, taught by a group of professors at the University of Pennsylvania School of Social Policy and Practice, students will interact in online discussions to examine the most pressing social justice and policy issues facing the United States. Instructors will continually post and update pertinent articles and thoughtful commentaries, and at the very end of the course, will work with students to create a list of priorities for the newly elected president and Congress.

2 Human Rights Activism, Advocacy and Change

In all societies, advocates and activists play an important role in ensuring human rights are respected, protected and promoted. This 14-week course will explore the role of social movements and activism in bringing about change, touching on topics such as women's rights activism, refugee and queer rights, and indigenous protests. By the end of the course, students will have a wide understanding of social movement theories and concepts, as well as their methods and outcomes.

3 Corruption

Every day we see high-level government officials resigning, hundreds of thousands of people holding up signs at demonstrations and oftentimes even risking their lives to protest the corruption in the world. Using examples from around the globe, this four-week course will discuss corruption from the perspective of countries, governments, businesses, citizens and the people within these entities. At the end, students will have a better understanding of not only what corruption is, but also its causes, effects and how to control it.

4 Citizenship and U.S. Immigration

This self-paced course will answer crucial questions such as: How is citizenship acquired, and can it be lost? Who decides who can enter the country, and who must leave? And what rights do noncitizens and those who have entered the country illegally have? In the final chapter of the unit, Deportation Proceedings and Border Security, students will be asked to consider the future direction of immigration law in the United States.

Study finds school discipline affected by races of teachers, students

More diversity needed among the nation's teachers

Student bodies across America are becoming more racially and ethnically diverse than ever before; however, their teachers are not.

And this lack of diversity can have long lasting ramifications for African American and Latino students according to findings published in the Winter 2017 edition of EducationNext.

The study, 'Teachers Race and School Discipline,' uncovered that students of color are far more likely than their white counterparts to be removed from school as a form of punishment – raising concerns about a "potential school-to-prison pipeline" that sees African Americans and Latinos overrepresented in the nation's prison system. The same study found those with a teacher of the same race were less likely to be removed from school as punishment – and likely to learn more.

As America becomes increasingly multi-cultural, it is critical that our nation's teachers reflect – and understand -- the diversity of the students they teach.

One of the most ethnically diverse colleges in the country, Cambridge College is uniquely poised to train tomorrow's educators to be agents of change in their own communities and to enable their own students to excel academically and socially.

Cambridge College's School of Education offers practitioner-centered, graduate programs with an extra emphasis on addressing the educational needs of multi-cultural populations. Using a blend of theory and practice, our programs prepare working adults, often already in the PreK-12 grade school settings, to practice in a broad range of specializations. We offer:

- A proven track record of success in training educators, with more than 20,000 alumni working in early childhood and elementary education, special education, STEM, English as Second Language, moderate disabilities, applied behavior analysis, interdisciplinary studies, school nurse education, and educational leadership.
- Post graduate certificates and graduate programs available in fast-growing special education fields, including:
 - Behavior Analyst
 - Autism Specialist
 - Teacher of Students with Moderate Disabilities
 - Multiple options for PK-12 teachers in special education to become school administrators as supervisor/directors and principals/assistant principals/
- Fully accredited, cutting-edge curricula taught by expert, hands-on faculty members.
- Flexible and convenient schedules with online, night, and weekend classes.
- Affordable for a great education AND a great value!

How do you know if you're a sex and love addict?

In the Netflix comedy "Love," Mickey (left) (Gillian Jacobs) is a sex and love addict navigating her relationship with Gus (Paul Rust). NETFLIX

Learning the signs of the intimacy disorder.

KATE MOONEY
@yatinbrooklyn
kate.mooney@netflix.us

At the end of Season 1 of the Netflix comedy "Love," Mickey (Gillian Jacobs) tells her sort-of boyfriend Gus (Paul Rust) that she's a sex and love addict. While they remain involved in Season 2, which premiered Friday, it's not an easy path, with Mickey navigating the ups and downs of their relationship while attending Sex and Love Addicts Anonymous meetings.

Mickey's reveal prompts many questions. For starters, what is sex and love addiction? And why don't we hear about it in a serious light, as we do with alcoholism and drug addiction? If you are a sex and love addict, does that mean you have to give up intimacy for good? And our most pressing question: How do you know if you're suffering from it?

Finding a definition is trickier than you'd think. For one, sex and love addiction isn't even included in the Diagnostic and Statistical Manual of Psychiatric Disorders, which is essentially considered the American Psychiatric Association's bible.

"There's a shame in our culture around sex," says therapist Robert Weiss, a digital age intimacy and relationships expert. "You can talk about heroin, you can talk about alcohol; the second you say you have a sexual problem, everybody runs the other way."

What is sex and love addiction?

Sex and Love Addicts Anonymous, a 12-step treatment program based on the Alcoholics Anonymous model, defines the organization as being "for anyone who suffers from an addictive compulsion to engage in or avoid sex, love, or emotional attachment."

S.L.A.A.'s 12 Characteristics of Sex and Love Addiction include lacking healthy boundaries in sexual or romantic relationships, using sex or emotional dependence as "substitutes for nurturing care and support," and excessively idealizing our partners.

Weiss, the author of several texts on the subject, including "Sex Addiction: 101," makes a distinction between addiction to sex and addiction to love. He defines the former as "using other people as objectified body parts" while the latter uses them "as emotional objects."

While a person might exhibit symptoms of both, they often manifest separately. For example, a sex addict will engage in casual sex with multiple partners a week, while a love addict might go from one unfulfilling relationship to the next.

In both cases, it's less about the sex or the romance, he explains. Instead, the high the addict experiences is from the pursuit of the conquest or the person — and losing themselves in the fantasy of it.

Are you suffering from sex and love addiction?

Haven't we all, at some point, found ourselves in a dysfunctional romantic relationship, or obsessed over a lover who didn't reciprocate the feelings? So how do you know when you have a problem?

"Ask yourself, are you compromising your ability to take care of yourself?" suggests Dr. Jeremy Frank, a Philly-based psychologist and addiction counselor. "Addicts gravitate towards substances or [in this case] another human being as a way to distract themselves from something they're suffering from."

Mickey (Gillian Jacobs) in a Sex and Love Addicts Anonymous meeting in "Love" on Netflix. NETFLIX

Put another way, Frank defines addiction as a behavior that causes consequences in major functioning areas in your life. If sex or dating is affecting you, your family, your job or your relationship with a significant other, then that might be a sign.

Weiss, who oversees more than a dozen addiction and mental health treatment programs, including Promises in Malibu, says that the majority of his patients have experienced relational trauma in early life — be it a history of physical or emotional abuse or abandonment, which has led to an inability to trust others.

Because of that, a love addict will often seek out unavailable partners, because they don't know what a healthy relationship would even look like, he explains. Similarly, a sex addict will engage in destructive behaviors, including putting themselves in abusive situations, to fulfill a desire to feel wanted.

The romantic notion of "losing yourself" in another person does not indicate a healthy relationship, Frank agrees. Instead, it's more like "when someone complements us and helps us know ourselves better, grow and challenge ourselves, rather than fulfills some unmet need."

How to get help

If you think you might have a problem with sex and love, taking S.L.A.A.'s 40 Questions for Self-Diagnosis online quiz is a good starting point, or check out S.L.A.A.'s book on the topic, the "S.L.A.A. Basic Text," which includes personal stories from sex and love addicts in the program. Visit sla.org to learn more about sex and love addiction, treatment and resources and to find a meeting at your local S.L.A.A. chapter.

WHAT HAVE YOU DONE FOR ME LATELY?

For anyone who thinks that Bill Belichick would never — under any circumstances — trade Tom Brady, take a hard look at Malcolm Butler's current situation. Just two years ago Butler was the toast of Boston, as he made arguably the greatest play in Super Bowl history with that game-winning interception against Seattle. In the 2015 and 2016 seasons, Butler improbably became an elite cornerback all while playing for relative chump change. Now, Belichick is trying to trade him because the Pats head coach doesn't think he's worth the bump in salary.

According to the Boston Herald's Jeff Howe, the Patriots "told Butler last season they wouldn't pay a CB more than $10 million annually, so the [Stephon] Gilmore contract was definitely a gut punch."

CSSNE's Mike Giardi tweeted: "Source tells me Butler and his camp remain extremely frustrated by Pats position & Gilmore signing. Courting offers elsewhere. Wants new home."

THE 'E' STANDS FOR EXPOSURE

St. Patrick's Day parades are the sloppiest form of parade known to man. So it's not a surprise that the best young running back in the NFL exposed the left breast of his lady friend during a parade in Dallas. (Who knew they celebrated St. Paddy's Day in Texas?) Cowboys running back Ezekiel Elliott pulled a woman's shirt down and it was obviously caught on camera. The woman reportedly wasn't upset with Elliott's actions, according to TMZ.

Elliott is only 21 years old and is still obviously immature, but he's got to know this stuff will go viral.

JAM-PACKED RAFTERS

The Brooklyn Nets hung a Biggie Smalls banner from the rafters of Barclays Center this past weekend. The "that's the only banner the Nets will ever hang" joke writes itself but is obviously way too easy.

I get that Biggie is a Brooklyn native, but where do we draw the line when it comes to retired jerseys and numbers by sports teams? Does this mean the Knicks have to respond and raise a Tupac banner because he was born in Harlem? (Oops, don't want to give greedy Dolan any ideas.)

The Biggie banner raising is only slightly less bizarre than when the Miami Heat retired Michael Jordan's No. 23. For the record, Jordan never played for the Miami Heat.

Then there's the Celtics, who retired the number of basically every player who played for them from 1960-77. By those standards, Kevin Garnett (who played six seasons in Boston and won one title), should absolutely have his number retired. The guy was, ya know, a better player than "Jungle" Jim Loscutoff, but this is somehow a debate in Boston.

What's going to happen 100 years from now? Do we have to start unretiring some of these numbers or are we going to have to venture into double-digits?

NEVER LET IT GO

Dan Patrick Show" this past week.

Patrick: Would you ever go back [to Indiana]?

Knight: As far as the hierarchy there at that time, I have absolutely no respect whatsoever with those people.

The 76-year-old Knight was unceremoniously fired by Indiana University in 2000, but time has not healed the wounds. Here's the exchange he had on "The Tremendous. If you don't recall,

Knight was accused of choking one of his former players and — in turn — Indiana then adopted a "zero tolerance" policy. He allegedly grabbed a student's arm that year after a brief encounter and was subsequently fired for "an unacceptable pattern of behavior."
